VPD Gets Classroom

The Valdosta School Board is giving a used, portable classroom to the Valdosta Police Department for a shelter at its shooting range.

Vickie Burt, director of personnel and instruction for the city school system, said the portable classroom at Valdosta High has not been used for classes since 1985. Until now, it has been used for storage, she said.

'Robin Hud'

ALTIMORE — "Robin Hud," the former real estate agent who claimed she stole about $6 million from HUD to help the poor, was sentenced Friday to the maximum prison term of nearly four years.

U.S. District Judge Herbert Murray issued the 46-month sentence at the request of the agent, Marilyn Harrell, who federal officials said stole more from the government than any individual.

"I will ask you for the maximum term because I deserve it," Harrell told the judge. "I have never said what I did was right. In fact, if a person steals cents they should be done with whatever the court sees fit."

Murray also sentenced Harrell to three years' probation and 624 hours of community service and ordered her to pay $600,000 in restitution. She was also ordered to serve a concurrent one-year sentence on the tax charge.

Prosecutors asked Murray to refigure the federal sentencing guideline formula used to determine her sentence, moving the limits from 30 to 37 months for 27 to 30 years, because of mitigating factors.

Teacher's Death Still Mystery

By DEAN POLING
Times Staff Writer

A Lowndes County teacher found shot to death earlier this week was buried Friday afternoon as sheriff's officials continued their investigation into mysterious circumstances surrounding her death.

Beverly K. Schappagh, 48, of Valdosta was found dead in her vehicle, parked in the playground beside her workplace, Pine Grove Primary School, early Monday morning.

She died from internal bleeding caused by a single gunshot wound to the left breast area. A gun belonging to Ms. Schappagh was found beside her in the car's passenger compartment. It has not yet been determined if this was the gun used in her death.

Lowndes County Sheriff's Department officials are still attempting to determine the motive behind Ms. Schappagh's death.

Officials know she was shot sometime between 5 p.m. Sunday and early Monday morning.

They believe Ms. Schappagh went to Pine Grove Primary to finish some school work that afternoon.

In addition to the fatal gunshot wound, there were several minor injuries on her body. According to reports from the Georgia State Crime Lab in Atlanta, she had a black eye, a bruise on one of her shoulders and both knees were scraped.

Lowndes County Sheriff G. Robert Carter said Friday the department's detective bureau is investigating every angle of the shooting but would not comment on the case's status.

Anyone in the vicinity of Pine Grove Primary on Benias Road from Sunday afternoon to Monday morning with any information regarding this case call 333-5138.

Colleagues and friends described Ms. Schappagh as a dedicated teacher who worked in the Lowndes County school system since 1973. She was a teacher at Habersham Elementary from 1979-1989 and worked at Pine Grove Primary for the past year.

Valdosta teacher Beverly K. Schappagh was found shot to death in her car Sunday.

Moody Getting NEXRAD System

By MARIO CHRISTALDI
Times Staff Writer

WASHINGTON — Moody Air Force Base is scheduled to get a sophisticated $2 million storm-tracking radar system as part of a nationwide overhaul of the National Weather Service's radar network.

The radar, scheduled for delivery to Moody in October 1993, is touted for its ability to detect dangerous weather systems as they are developing.

Based on the intensity we can issue a warning right away, and you get the extra 20 or 30 minutes to take cover or organize emergency forces," said Don Sarreals, a Weather Service meteorologist involved in coordinating the project. "It allows you to gear up for anything — before it's too late," he said. There are plans to install 175 of the NEXRADs — Next Generation Weather Radars — at sites in the United States and worldwide during the next five years.

A visitor to the NEXRAD site at Moody would see a small fenced compound and steel tower, topped by a 35-foot diameter ball housing a 35-foot radar antenna.

The installations are to be part of an estimated $20 billion Weather Service modernization program aimed at replacing outmoded technology with a high-tech arsenal of radars, computers and satellites. Along with early warning, the equipment is expected to cut down on false alarms.

Rep. James Scheuer, D-N.Y., who chairs a House panel studying the Weather Service's capabilities, has called the current weather forecasting system "a national shame" that is "overseeing in the Paleolithic age."

Frazier: Looking For Another 100

"In 1984, I was 100 years old," said Valdostian Elijah Frazier. "I reckon I'll make it another hundred."

Frazier, a resident of Crestwood Nursing Home, celebrated his 106th birthday Friday. Other residents of the nursing home and some of his relatives sang "Happy Birthday" to the first and heaviest man in the county.

Frazier's three nieces, Georgia Norbels and Vera Haden of Valdosta and Dina King of Plant City, Fla., and his great nephew John Fleming sat beside him at the party.

"It's not every day that someone turns 106," said Gwyn Hooker, Frazier's 104-year-old sister.

"When I went into his room this morning, he was 6 years old and I was 21," she started over.

A Rising Storm Locally

By DEAN POLING
Times Staff Writer

AIDS cases in South Georgia have risen slightly this year, say most local health officials. While two northern Florida hospitals report their number of AIDS-related cases are about the same as last year, Corretta Roberts, AIDS health educator at the Lowndes County Health Department, said Friday about 100 cases were reported within the past year in two units of Georgia's Health District 9 — which is up slightly from a year ago, she said.

She also noted more heterosexuals are testing positive for AIDS, while the homosexual rate of cases has stabilized regionally.

County-by-county figures of reported AIDS cases were not available. District 8 Unit 1 includes Lowndes, Brooks, Berrien, Cook, Lanier, Echols, Tift, Turner, Ben Hill and Irwin counties. District 2, headquartered in Albany, handles a six- to seven-county area, she said.

Though no regional estimates of AIDS-related deaths were available at the health department, two local hospitals reported at least four in the past year.

Dr. Russell Acree of the Memorial Hospital of Adel reported two AIDS-related deaths. He said he was dealing with eight to 10 AIDS patients in the local area.

Acree said everyone should be tested for the disease. "It's very difficult to give an estimate of how many people in the region may have the AIDS virus because so many people have been tested," he said.

AIDS In The Area

- Brooks County Hospital reported three AIDS cases this year with two deaths.
- Madison County (Fla.) Memorial Hospital reported handling 20 cases but had no AIDS-related deaths in the past year.
- Hamilton County (Fla.) Memorial Hospital reported handling 10 cases so far this year.

Clinch Memorial Hospital reported no deaths and only three to four AIDS cases in the past few years, said Loren Dickerson, nursing director.

Berrien County Hospital reported no deaths as well as no cases within the past year. Cindy Odum, a hospital representative, said. The hospital had only one AIDS case last year, she said.

Lanier County's Louis Smith Memorial Hospital reported no deaths and "less than three cases" last year, said director of medical records, said.

South Georgia Medical Center in Valdosta had no available records for release Friday afternoon.

But, whereas, regional county hospitals in Florida reported relatively low number of AIDS cases, Florida's Hamilton and Madison counties had a much higher rate of reported AIDS cases.

Mike Parley, administrator of Madison County Memorial Hospital, said his institution dealt with no AIDS-related deaths but reported 20 cases the past year. A number consistent with last year's reported cases.

Hamilton County Memorial Hospital, Administrator Amelia Tuten said they've seen about 10 AIDS cases which is about the same as last year.
